

Harlan County Schools recently sent a team of teachers and administrators to the Kentucky Center for School Safety in Richmond for a symposium on bullying. In the bottom photo, teachers Harlan County High School Teacher Lisa Roberts and Wallins Elementary Teacher Holly Alred listen to one of the keynote speakers, while in the top photo HCHS Media Specialist Anissa Alred and HCHS Principal Bob Howard and HCHS Principal Bob Howard take part in training activities. The symposium presented various experts in bullying and cyber bullying prevention. Presenters addressed signs of bullying, bullying in athletics, youth risk online, positive online behavior, and many other topics related to recognizing and preventing bullying in Kentucky schools. Harlan County Schools Superintendent says student safety is the top priority for his district, noting that it is vital that teachers and administrators participate in these type trainings to stay abreast of trends affecting students and education. The Harlan County team was featured on the Kentucky Center for School Safety's web page at <http://www.kysafeschools.org/>.